Why must we do warming up?

Warming up prepares our cardiovascular system for physical activities, by increasing the blood flow to our muscles and raising the temperature of our body. When our muscles are adequately warmed up, the movements and pressures we put on them during exercise are less serious, thus minimising muscle pain.

Part 3

You are going to read an extract from a novel. For questions 19 to 26, choose the correct answer (A,B,C or D) and mark the correct letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet.

Nobody told Holly and Gerry that they were short on time. Sometimes, Holly would daydream while walking on the street. She giggled when she recalled a joke that she shared with Gerry. That was her routine. She would fall into days of deep dark depression, then finally build up the strength to be positive and okay for another few days. At times, the tiniest and simplest thing would make her in tears again. It was a tiring process and most of the time she couldn't be bothered battling her mind. It was far stronger than any muscle in her body.

Friends and family came and went. They helped to dry her tears and often made her laugh. Holly realised that even in her laughter, she knew that there was something missing. She never seemed to be truly happy. It felt like she was just passing time while she waited for something else. Holly was just tired of existing; she wanted to live. But what was the point of living when there is no life in it? This question kept spinning in her head. Holly felt like her life is a dream that she lives in. There was no difference. Deep down, she knew it was normal to feel like this after losing the love of her life. Holly didn't particularly think she was losing her mind. She knew that people said that one day she would be happy again and that this feeling would just be a distant memory. It was getting to that day that was the hardest part.

Holly read and re-read Gerry's original letter over and over, analysing each word and each sentence. Every day, she came up with new meaning. Holly could sit until the cows came home, trying to read between the lines and guess the hidden messages. She didn't understand the letter clearly. It really broke her heart because she realised that she will never speak to him again. Holly had a hard time to accept the fact that Gerry is gone. It drove her insane.

Now, May had gone and June had arrived. These months brought bright long evenings and beautiful morning. And with these bright sunny days in June brought clarity. There was no hiding indoors as soon as it got dark, and there were no lie-ins until the afternoon. Things should be the same for Holly.

It seemed as though the whole of Ireland had come out of a long sleep, taken a big stretch and a yawn and suddenly started living again. It was time to open all the windows and air out of the house. To Holly, it was time to free her life from the ghosts of the winter and dark days. It was time to get up early with the songbirds and go for a walk. Try to look people in the eye, smile and say "hello" instead of hiding. She has been hiding herself; under layers of clothes with eyes to the ground while running from destination to destination and ignoring the world. She decided to stop hiding in the dark, to hold her head up high and come face-to-face with the truth.

Month of June also brought another meaningful letter. Holly had been receiving few letters from Gerry after his passing. Today, she sat out in the sun; feeling happy in the new brightness of life. She felt nervous but excited as well to read the fourth letter. She loved the feel of the card and the bumps of Gerry's handwriting under her finger as it ran over the dried ink. Inside the letter, his neat handwriting had listed his belongings and the items that remained in the house. Beside each of his items; he explained what he wanted Holly to do with them and where he wished for them to be sent. At the bottom it read.

P. S., I love you, Holly, and I know you love me. You don't need my belongings to remember me by, you don't need to keep them as proof that I existed or still exist in your mind. You don't need to wear my sweater to feel me around you; I'm already there . . . always wrapping my arms around you.

Adopted from P.S I Love You by Cecilia Ahern, Chapter 16.

Mark your answers on the separate answer sheet.

BREAKING A PROMISE

Seman and his parents lived in a village called Ulu Petai. He was not a good-looking fellow. The complexion on his face and hands was flawed. At the end of the village, there was a thick jungle. And at the edge of the jungle, there was a big flat rock. When some of the villagers went into the jungle looking for the petai fruit, they came across a beautiful princess there. They said she was one of the spirit people.

One day, while looking for firewood, Seman lost his way. 27 _____ When he woke up, he found himself at a palace and a princess beside him. “Now you have become my husband” said the princess.

Seman was stunned. He felt fresh and smelled good. As he was feeling his face, he saw that both his hands were perfectly even toned. Seman and his wife lived happily, but after a while, he began to miss his own village. 28 _____ “Whenever you are in trouble, beloved, rub this stone. I will send you help, but do remember you mustn’t be disloyal” said the princess.

When Seman reached his village, he saw his father and mother were grieving. As soon as they saw Seman, they were overjoyed. 29 _____ His face and hands were not flawed anymore.

His parents wanted to hold a big feast and they wanted to invite everyone in the village. Unfortunately, they did not have enough food supply and utensils. 30 _____ However, no matter how he searched for it, he couldn’t find it. Finally, he asked his mother.

“I’ve thrown it away. It’s not a precious stone, just an old black stone. I thought it had no value” said his mother. “You what? You’ve thrown it away? That was a gift from my wife! Why on Earth didn’t you ask me first?” Seman questioned his mother. 31 _____ The old lady was frightened and started crying.

All of a sudden, Seman began to shiver, He fell to the floor, the ugly complexion on his face and hands reappeared. 32 _____ Both his parents were shocked and broke down in tears. It appeared that Seman had broken the promise he made to his wife. He had been rude and disloyal to his mother.
